Finding a way

I go searching with my oil paints, entering an unknowingness searching intuitively for what is meant to happen on the canvas. I draw inspiration from processing everything that comes my way, the people, atmospheres, nature and emotions. I keep looking for poetry with a nerve or an essence that brings meaning when working. I always try and purvey a sense of hope, maybe just for myself, an understanding or empathy that only whispers between what is light and dark in life.

In my work I can create my own paths. Sometimes it is as if I try opening a door to an otherness or otherworldliness where there is a place for me a place where I can belong, a hopeful and more gentle place to be ... think I sort of protest quietly against the harshness of this world!

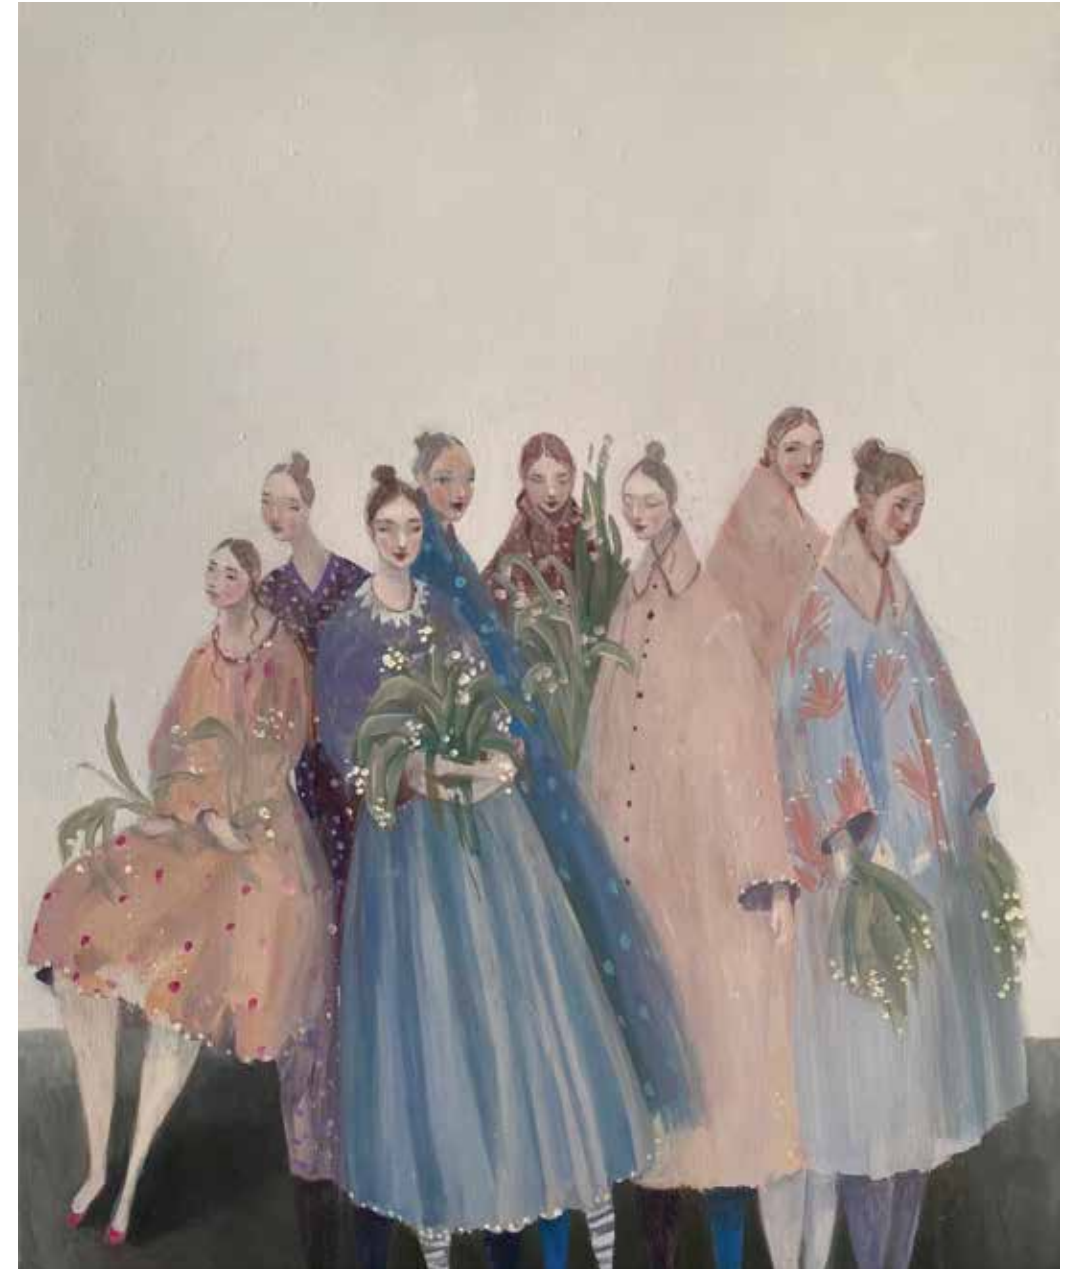

'If I try placing too many words or meaning onto my figures, it is like they disappear. Working intuitively is what I do. I know when I have reached a nerve in my paintings, it is like a quiet understanding is appearing.'
